Can Nervous Diseases

Be Caused by Eye Strain? The literature of medicine goes to prove conclusively that the duration of life is materially shortened by nervous debility and the diseases which it entails. Any factor, therefore, in their causation ought not to be overlooked. If the view that Eye-strain is a frequent cause of functional nervous derangements proves to be the correct one beyond the possibility of a doubt or cavil, it is not difficult to see that a hope of marked relief or of ultimate recovery is practically extended to many hopeless sufferers upon whom drugs have exerted little or no benefit.

A few of the troubles which result directly from neglect in this particular are Neuralgia. Sick Headactic, Dispepsia, Insanity and Nervous Prostration. If you have any of the above troubles call on
